THE LABOR CRISIS
It is unfortunate for organized labor that the current crisis in labor's relation to the defense program hinges on the issue of the "closed shop." For, on that question, the sympathy of the American public is against labor's demands. When labor demands a fair and decent working conditions, as a rule the public is on labor's side. But when the issue is solely one of what organizations a man belongs to, the public feels that it is nothing to do with his right to a job.

We have repeatedly said in these columns that no man should be forced to belong to any organization in order to get a job. And a labor union should have a fair hearing on demands whether it speaks for one per cent or one hundred per cent of employees.

Not only do we believe that the right not to join a union is as important as the right to join a union, but we submit that it is unfair to an employer to make said employer deduct labor union dues out of an employee's pay-check.

We believe that the vast majority of workers are in disapproval of many methods used by labor chiefs. We concede that such chiefs as John L. Lewis have done much for the American worker, but labor as well as capital must adhere to basic American principles in order to continue to receive the free hand it has enjoyed in recent years. Today in France labor unions are not allowed to exist. Let American labor unions protect their right to exist by confining demands to living wage and hour considerations.

Crochet Useful Gifts for Christmas
If you like your Christmas gifts to be gay and charming, yet practical at the same time, here are four ideas that will please you. On the practical side, too, you can crochet all of these gifts yourself, for a mere pittance. Three balls each of red and white pearl cotton will make a set of four garments that will do honor to the most pretentious clothes closet. The crocheted glass jacket is handy for the hostess and she'll be gay and festive in red, white and blue pearl cotton which will give you a set of two or four of these party frocks. For a good cool on your list, make a set of two or four of these party frocks. Use two shades of pearl cotton, reversing your colors to make some light with dark lettering, others dark with light. These gifts may be obtained by sending a stamped, self-addressed envelope to the Needlework Department of this paper, specifying design #226.

Edward Morgan, Colored

It was with deep sorrow that I learned recently of the death of my old colored friend, "Uncle Ed Morgan," who passed at his sons home in Roanoke, Virginia, at the ripe old age of 98.

This removes the last of three men brought up under the influence of that distinguished family. They were noted for their high character and integrity, and for all that was good and uplifting in their industry, honesty and economy, bought farms, John was a prominent minister, and wielded a great influence for good in the community. This removes another of the old type of colored citizens, the ranks of which are now getting thin, who was respected and admired by those of us who were soon after the civil war and enjoyed the association with this good old type of the colored race. We deeply sorrow at the passing of the few who are left.

A true white friend of "Uncle Ed."

Give Thanks, America

Deep-rooted in our nation in origin and purpose, Thanksgiving this year means more, holds a deeper, more serious significance for us Americans than ever before.

We still enjoy the priceless heritage of freedom—freedom which aggressive war has ruthlessly crushed out of so many nations and peoples of the world.

The territory of our railroad, and our country as a whole, are blessed with renewed industrial activity and full harvests—while industry and agriculture in many other lands have been bled white—ravaged by war.

We of the Norfolk and Western Family are grateful that our modern railway plant and our long experience, plus the fine cooperation of shippers and receivers of freight, have enabled us to meet the constantly increasing transportation needs of national defense and expanding industry—smoothly and efficiently.

But there's a bigger job ahead for all of us, if we are to preserve the freedom and the many other blessings we still enjoy—a job that demands harder work, more sacrifice, more genuine patriotism. So, as we give humble thanks at this season, we must face our grave responsibilities, united as true Americans, and determine to do the job as only we Americans can do it.
